Parental Revocation of Consent

At any time, after your child begins receiving special education and related services, you have the right to revoke consent, in writing, to your child's continued receipt of special education and related services. Once your written revocation of consent is received by the school district, it must provide you with prior written notice a reasonable time before ceasing the provision of special education and related services.

The following provisions apply to parental revocation of consent:

- The revocation of consent for special education services does not remove the special education records in your child's education file.
- The revocation of consent releases the school district from liability for providing FAPE from the time you revoke consent for special education and related services until the time, if any, that your child is evaluated and deemed eligible.
- You may request an evaluation to determine if your child is eligible, at the time of your request, for special education and related services. This will be considered an initial evaluation.
- Your child will be treated the same as any other nondisabled student, along with access to accommodations, if any, that are available to nondisabled students.
- Your child's IEP will no longer be in effect. The school district is not required to provide FAPE, conduct a three year reevaluation, or hold annual IEP meetings.
- Your child will be subject to the same disciplinary procedures and timelines applicable to general education students.
- Your school district continues to have obligations under "child find" to identify, locate and evaluate all children with disabilities.
